HIMSELF, || A) s. n. om., ipse (see ipsemet only, Plaut. Amphit. Prolog. 10, 2, [ipsemet] abijt), and pi. ipsimet, C. 3 Ferr. 1, 3). || B) In an oblique case: a) by sui (sibi, se, or sese) alone: I have restored my brother to h., reddidi fratrem sibi: to hurt h., sibi nocere: to forget h., sui oblivisci: with h., accum. b) by sui and ipse: (1.) If an opposition is to be indicated between the subject and some other subject, ipse will be in the nom. (or, in the case of acc. cum infini., in the acc.) Junius necem sibi ipse concivit = he himself, and no other, did the deed; so Varius Quintilius se ipse in tabernaculo interfecit, Vell. 2, 71, 3; deforme est de se ipsum prædicare, C. (2) If the opposition is to the object, the ipse will be in the same case as the sui; qd sibi ipsi inimicus est, is an enemy to h., not (as would be more natural) to another. (3.) If, however, a strong emphasis lies on the subject, the ipse may remain in the nom., even when the object has an implied notion opposed to it; and, in general, C. is partial to the retention of ipse in nom. [Zumpt, 696]; thus, ut non modo populo Romano, sed etiam sibi ipse condemnatus videretur, Ferr. 1, 6; but qui potest exercitum in continere imperator, qui se ipsum (opp. exercitum) non potest? Manl. 13.—Of h., ipse, suâ sponte, ultro (e. g. polliceri, of his own free will).—By h., per se (ipse); per se solus: suo Marte, but always with ref. to the orig. meaning of the expression. [see] not proprio Marte.—All = without the help of any other person).—solus (alone).—separatim

(separately, opp. to 'in conjunction with others'; e. g. ludus et cum collēgā et separatim edidit): to live by h., secum vivere: to have found athg out by h., per se invenisse qd. To learn by h., sine magistro discere: he had done it quite of h., suā sponte fecerat: to recover h., ad se redire. To deceive h., falli. To vex h., cruciari: to avail h. of athg, uti qā re.—A likeness of h., sui similia species (C. Tusc. 1, 15, 34); sua imago (Plaut. Pseud. 1, 1, 55). To be always h., or like h., semper suum esse (e. g. in disputando, C. Fin. 4, 4, 10).

HIND, || The stag, cervā. || Boor, vid. || Servant, vid.

HINDER, adj. aversus (turned away; in the back, not in the front; opp. adversus).—posticus (what is behind athg; e. g., at the back of a house, opp. anticus). H. part., pars posterior. pars aversa; of the head, occipitium; aversa pars capitis.

HINDER, || Delay; oppose the execution, &c., impede qm (qd); in athg, a qā re, and simply qā re (to hinder) never in qā re.—impedimentum esse ei (ei rei); in athg, ad qd (never in qā re).—impedimentum afferre ei rei faciendū (g. i.).—obstare or officere ei and ei rei cs (to be opposed to athg; obstare, simply to stand in the way of; but officere, to be opposed to as an enemy; e. g., cs consiliis obstare or officere).—retardare qm, in athg, ad qd faciendū or a qā re faciendū, in qā re (to check athg; e. g., qm a scribendo retardare; ad qd fruentum).—interpellare qm, in athg, in qā re (to disturb a person in the practice of athg; e. g. in suo iure).—qm avocare, avertre, abducere ab qā re (to draw off a person fm doing or attempting athg; to hinder him in it). 'From,' with the participial subst. after 'to hinder,' is rendered in Latin by nē or quominus (rarely by an infn.), and, if a negation precede the verb, by quin; see Zumpt, § 543: I do not hinder him fm &c., non moror, quominus &c.

2) Present, prohibere qm; fm athg, qā re; more rarely a re (see Mōb. Cæs. B. G. 4, 11); *fm doing athg, nē, quin or quominus, faciat; where obs. that going points to the result, so that if 'I did not h. his going' means 'I did not make any objection to it,' 'I did not try to h. it,' we must say non prohibui nē, or quominus proficisceretur; for non prohibui quin proficisceretur would mean, that 'though I tried to h. him, he nevertheless went.' (Of the unsuccessful attempt, non posse prohibere (quin) is more common (Krüger, 575, affl. Haase ad Reisig, p. 579).—arcere qm re and a re (to h. by keeping off; to guard agst).—dehortari (to dissuade), affl. wch verb the Eng. 'from,' affl. 'to h.,' is expressed by nē or quominus, or by infn.; see Zumpt, § 543, sq., who says that impedire and detertere are sita, and prohibere often, followed by infn.—avocare, abducere qm a re (as it were, to call back, bring away athg fm a thing). *To h. an enemy fm laying waste, fm crossing, &c., hostem prohibere populationibus, transitu: to h. athg fm flight, fugam cs reprimere: to be hindered (to be interrupted or disturbed in one's business), interpellari: to be hindered by very important business, maximis occupationibus distineri or impediri. We are hindered fm doing athg, prohibemur qd facere.

HINDERER, morator (delayer; e. g. publici commodi, L. 2, 4); or Cret. qui impedimentum affert ei rei faciendū; qui impedimento est ei rei, ad qd, &c.

HINDMOST, HINDERMOST. See LAST.

HINDRANCE, impedimentum (to not obstructum).—avocatio a re (to an occupation, to business).—mora (delay, cause of delay). To be a h., impedimenti loco esse: to be a h. to a person or thing, impedimento esse ei or ei rei, ad qd (to hinder) never in qā re; impedire qm or qd, in athg, a qā re, or qā re only (to hinder) never in qā re; impedimentum afferre, in or to athg, ei rei faciendū (of persons and things); obesse ei and ei rei (to be agst a person or thing, opp. prodesset); cf. To hinder: it was a great h. to the Gauls in battle, that &c., Gallis magno ad pugnam erat impedimento, quod &c.: I will be no h., nulla in me or per me est mora; nihil in me est mora: I will be no h. to his resigning the decemvirate, non moror, quominus abeat a decemviratu.

HINGE, s. cardo (also improper, of the hinges on wch athg turns; e. g. ubi cs rei [litium, Q. 12, 8, 2] cardo veritatis; so tanto cardine removere, P. Æn. 1, 672). To take a door off its h.'s, emovere postes cardine; postes a cardine vellere (V.): a h. creaks, cardo mutit (Plaut.), stridet (V.). Prose. To be off the h.'s, perturbari or perturbatum esse; loco et certo de statu demoveri (of the mind, deprived of its self-possession, C.); de statu suo declinare (of persons, C.).

HINGE, v. That on wch athg h.'s, cardo cs rei, or (445)

ubi cs rei cardo veritatis (Q.); quod maxime rem continet (L. 39, 48, 2).

HINT, v. Indicare ei qd, docere qm qd (to give aby private information of athg. to not indigitare or innuere, Ruhnk. ad Murat. 2, 117).—significare (to give to understand).—subjicere (to suggest; to h. to a person what to say or do).—summonere (to give a warning or secret hint; only Ter. and Suet.).—ci nutu signum dare (to give a sign). To h. at athg, significare qd or de qā re.—tangere qd (to touch it).

HINT, s. significatio (g. i., for making it understood who or what one means).—nutus (nod). To throw out several plain h.'s, multas nec dubias significationes jacere (Ter. Ner. 37). If I had given the slightest h., the thing might have been easily done, si innuissem modo, hoc facile perfici posset.

HIP, coxa, coxendix.

HIPPISH. See HYPOCHONDRIAC.

HIPPOGRIFF, || hippogrups (cf. hippocentaurus, &c.).

HIPPOPOTAMUS, hippopotamus (Plin.).—equus fluviatilis (Plin. 8, 21, 30).

HIRE, s. merces: yearly, annua (for persons and things, as pay, wages for h.).—vectigal (as the income of one who lets on h.).

HIRE, v. conducere, with or without mercēde or pretio. Hired labourers, opere conductæ or mercenariæ. || To hire oneself out, se or operam suam locare (Plaut.); to athg, ci; for any purpose, ad quam rem.

HIRE, conducticius (of persons and things).—mercenarius (of persons).—(mercēde) conductus. (to hire) conducticius and mercenarius used in respect of the class to wch the person or thing h. belongs; (mercēde) conductus, in respect of the person or thing h., considered individually as to its state: thus domus conducticia is a house belonging to the class of those wch are let on hire, as opposed to those wch are private property (see Porc. ap. Suet. vit. Terent. 1, 2, 1); domus (mercēde) conducticia is a house wch I have hired, in wch I live as tenant: miles conducticius or mercenarius is a soldier belonging to the class of those who serve for pay: miles mercēde conductus is one whom I have taken into pay.

HIRELING. See HIRE (of persons).

HIRER, conductor.

HIS, suus (when it relates to the principal substantive of the sentence; i. e., to the definite subject or object of the verb to wch it belongs itself).—ejus, illius (when it does not relate to the principal substantive of the sentence, and whenever the use of suus would create an ambiguity; thus, accipiter cepit columbam in nido suo would leave it doubtful whether the hawk's nest or the dove's was meant; so Sextius . . . ad eum [Scipionem] filium ejus adduxit, i. e. Scipio's; suum would be ambiguous. Achai Macedonum regem suspectum habebant pro ejus crudelitate, L.; but suus is even here used when the sense of the passage sufficiently guards agst the grammatically possible obscurity; cf. Krüger, 407). 1. In a dependent sentence, suus is generally used when the 'his' relates to the subject of the principal sentence, provided it could not be referred to the subject of the dependent sentence itself; e. g. tum ei dormienti idem ille visus est rogare, ut quoniam sibi vivo non subvenisset, mortem suam ne inultam esse pateretur; sita, however, ejus is used in this case (see remark on ejus, illius), and very often ipsius, wch should be regularly used when suus would produce an ambiguity; e. g. Caesar milites suos incusavit, ut de a. u. l. [= militum] virtute, aut de i. p. s. u. [= Caesaris] diligentia desperaret, Cæs. 43. In the case of the acc. with the infn., 'is' is allowable, a) if the acc. with infn. does not depend immediately on the verb to whose subject the 'his' refers; e. g. Siculi me æpe pollicitum esse dicebant—commodis eorum me non defuturum; the acc. and infn. depends immediately on pollicitum esse, not dicebant; b) if the pron. relates not to the subject, but to the object, aranti Q. Cincinnato nuntiatum est, eum dictatorem esse factum, C.; but here suus is correct and common (Krüger, 411). 2. In dependent clauses with a finite verb: if the verb is in indicative, 'is' is used; if in the subjunctive, suus; tangebatur animi dolore, quod domum ejus . . . reddiderunt nudam atque inanem, where it might be quod domum suam . . . reddidissent, if the statement were not made as a fact. These rules, however, are neither of them without exception (Krüger, 411, 412). 3. In co-ordinate clauses (joined by 'but,' 'and') 'is' is used; thus, when two subjects are connected by 'and,' the second being referred to the first by 'his,' ejus is used; but if the connection is by cum, suus is used; e.g. Isocrates et discipuli ejus: Isocrates cum discipulis suis; so too, Isocrates sine discipulis suis.—HIS 3. 'his' in Lat. is not expressed unless there is some emphasis or distinction, or the notion of possession is to be strongly marked; e.g. not my book, but h., non meus liber, sed illius.—H. own, suus proprius. ejus proprius (when possession is strongly marked: the former, when the ref. is to the principal substantive; the latter, when not).—suus (when possession is either not meant, or not strongly marked).—HIS 4. suus is its strengthened by the appended met or pie, and by the addition of ipse, agreeing with the subject or other principal word to which 'his' refers: Crassum suapte interfectum manu. C.; sœvitia, quam... in sanguine ipse suum exerceret, L. 7, 4. Sis the ipse in the gen., but this 'does not occur so often as Drakenborch [Liv. 7, 40, 9] thinks' (Z.), when the ref. is to the subject; e.g. suum ipsius caput execratum, L. 30, 20, for ipsum. H. party, friends, &c., sui: to render to every man h. due, suum cuique tribuere. HIS 5. 'On his part', aſt, a way, nec... quidem (e.g. sed nec Jugurtha quidem interea quietus erat, S. Jug. 51).

HISS, v. sibilare (HIS sibilum edere, fundere, or effundere, are poet.).—stridere or stridere (to h. horribly; also of iron plunged in water: Luff, 6, 149). To h. and hoot, see HOOT. HIS 1. To hiss at, off, or down, sibilare. exsibilare. sibilis consecrari, concindere (ἐκσπίντεν, to show dissatisfac-tion with aby by hissing: to h. at a speaker or actor).—qm sibilis vexare (Pal. Maz.).—e acenā sibilis explodere (to drive off the stage by hissing: to h. an actor off the stage).—ēletere, exigere (ἐκβάλλειν, ἐκπίντεν; g. t., by hissing, whistling, or slumping: to cry down either a speaker, author, actor, or a play: see Ruhnck. Vell. 2, 28, 3; Ter. Andr. Prol. 27). To be hissed down or off, elcxi, exigi (to fail, ἐκπίπτειν): to h. at or down a piece or play, exigere fabulam: one that has never been hissed at, intactus a sibilu.

HISS, HISSING, sibilis, sibilum (of the whistling of the wind, &c., also of serpents, O.; and esply of popular assemblies, &c.).—stridor (the angry hissing of serpents, geese, &c.).

HIST! at! or st! tacete (cf. C. de Or. 2, 64; Fam. 16, 24, 2).

HISTORIAN, historiarum scriptor. scriptor, with or without rerum, or rerum gestarum. rerum explicator. rerum gestarum pronunciator (so far as he arranges, writes down, or relates facts and occurrences).—rerum antiquarum scriptor (as describing the affairs of times long past).—auctor, with and without rerum, or rerum gestarum (so far as he is used or quoted as authority).—HIS 1. historicus denotes rather a person who devotes himself to historical pursuits, a reader or investigator of history, who, however, may also be a writer of history: cf. Top. 20, 78. Np. Alcib. 11, 1. HIS 2. not historiographus. An h. of great name or accuracy, auctor gravissimus: an h. of no authority, of no great accuracy, auctor levis nec satis fidus: the earlier h.'s, priores (e.g. Walch, T. Agric. 10, 1, p. 178): the old h.'s, scriptores veteres or antiqui; (sm context) veteres or antiqui only (Syn. in Ancients): future h.'s, historiarum futuri scriptores.

HISTORIC, HISTORICAL, historicus (opp. oratorius, quotidianus, &c.; e.g. genus historicum: sermo historicus). But the word is to be used cautiously: the penitentes historicæ, rerum, will often help. H. books, (not libri historici, but) literarum monumenta, commentarii, annales, literæ. H. accuracy, historicæ or rerum fides (historica fides only in O. Am. 3, 12, 44). To describe a person's character with h. accuracy, qm ad historie fidem scribere (C.). An h. painter, *qui res gestas, or res ex annalibus depromptas pingit: to illustrate a subject by h. examples, *ex annalibus deprompta referre &c.: to pass fm mythological to h. times, ut jam a fabulis ad facta veniamus. H. painting, *res gestas pingendi ars. An h. picture, pictura (or tabula picta) rerum gestarum (aft. Plin. 16, 33, 60, and 35, 4, 7). A dry narrator of h. facts, non exornator rerum sed tantummodo narrator (C.). 'Historical studies', see phrases under HISTORY.

HISTORICALLY, historice. To state athg as h. true, obligare verba sua historicæ fide (O.).

HISTORIOGRAPHER, scriptor rerum (gestarum).—scriptor historiarum. See HISTORIAN.

HISTORY, A narration, narratio.—dim. narratiuncula.—memoria cs rel or de re (account that is in existence, or has been circulated; e.g. de Myrone memoria duplex prodita est). History = collected narrative of events, res or res gestæ.—memoria (446) rerum gestarum.—memoria annalium.—res veteres antiquitas (i. e. ancient h.).—literæ (as far as contained in books or other written documents, esply as bearing on national customs and manners; Np. Praef. 2; Pel. 1, 1).—historia or historia rerum gestarum (mostly implying a scientific or careful treatment of the subject). Fabulous or mythological h., historia fabularis (Suet.); fabulæ. The Roman h., res populi Romani; litteræ pop. Rom.; historia pop. Rom. Universal h., perpetua rerum gestarum historia (C. Fam. 5, 12, 6). HIS 1. An adj. with 'history' should mostly be translated by a gen. with rerum; thus, sacred, profane history, historia rerum sacrarum, profanarum; or, al all events, historia, quam dicimus sacræ, profanæ, &c. Grecian h., historia rerum Græcarum, or res Græcarum only. HIS 2. To write a h., historiam scribere, componere, or instituere; rerum gestarum historiam completi: to write the h. of his own times, scribere historiam earum rerum, quæ sunt ipsius ætate gestæ (C.): to write the Roman h., res Romanas, or populi Romani, historiam comprehendere, perscribere; res Romanas in historiam conferre: to complete a h., historiam perficere, absolvere: to study h., historiam se dare: to be well read or versed in h., historias plures novisse: to be very fond of h., esse magno studio rerum veterum: to have no knowledge of h., nullam memoriam antiquitatis collegisse. Well versed in ancient h., omnis antiquitatis peritissimus.

HISTRIONIC, histrionalis—scenicus. See THEATRICAL.

HIT, v. icere. ferire. percutere (ic. mly by throwing, e.g. fulmine ictus.—I. x. by pushing, striking; but also by missiles.—percut. stronger than icere, to strike a man such a blow as shakes him through and through).—pul-sare (to knock or strike either a person or thing; of a person, to strike him with hand or stick, to wound his honour by a blow).—mulcare (to beat a man soundly with fists or clubs). To h. aby with a stone, qm lapide percutere: to be h. by a stone fm the w. l., saxo de muro icti: to h. the mark, or to 'hit' (absol.), scopum ferire, or ferire only: collineare (e.g. quis est... qui totam diem jaculans non aliquando collineat? C.): not to h. the mark, non ferire (of the person); deerrare (of the thing shot or hurled): to h. the bull's eye, medium ferire: you have h. the right nail on the head, rem acu tetigit (Plaut. Rud. 5, 2, 19): aby is h. hard (as remark of another person), hoc habet (gladiatorial term). HIS 1. To reach completely. IF, si (here (1) the indicatives of all tenses is used, when the condition is 'simply assumed': si dixit, dicebat, dixit, dixerat, dicet, dixerit [simple supposition]. (2) The subjunctive present, if it be a supposition that is assumed as one that is uncertain indeed now, but which will be determined by the event to be or not be. Here 'if it is' = 'if it should be found to be': 'should prove to be': si quid habent, dabit, I don't know whether he has any or not: if it should prove that he has, I assert confidently that he will give it. Here the consequence is usually in the future indicative. The English indicative must not mislead us. [Uncertainty with the prospect of decision.] (3) If a case, whether possible or impossible, is simply conceived by the mind, the present subjunctive is used: si existat ab Inferis Lycurgus, &c. The present subjunctive is also used in the consequence: dies deficiat, si enumerare velim, &c. [Uncertainty without any accessory notion.] Here the imperfect subj. is also used in both clauses: seldom, however, in comparison of the present; those tenses having also the office of denoting what would take place, if a certain condition were realized which has not been realized. (4) The condition may be one which is not or has not been realized. [Impossibility or belief the thing is not so.] Here the imperf. or pluperf. subj. is used in both clauses, the imperf. subj. being often used in one or both clauses where we should in English use the pluperfect. (See Z. § 325.) Si with imperf. subj. sts denotes a repeated action, the verb of the principal clause is then in imperf; si

quis prehenderetur...eripiebatur: sts (nec holds of all the other tenses) is an accessory clause of a s-n tense that is itself expressed in the subjunctive: veritus ne (si) semper atomus gravitate ferretur naturaliter nihil nobis liberum esset.—In Latin the conditional relation is often expressed by a participial construction: e. g. non mihi, nisi admonito, in mentem venisset, if I had not been told; maximas virtutes jacere necesse est, voluptate dominante, if pleasure be our mistress. But if, sin; sin autem; si vero (Ecc.) very rarely si autem: but if not, si non; si minus; si aliter [Z. 343]: if not, nisi, ni (when whole clauses are opposed); si non (merely introduces a negative supposition, the non belonging to the verb: Z. 342): if indeed, si quidem; si modo (if only): if by any chance, si forte (Ecc.) not si fortasse: if ever, si quando, si aliquando.—Inquam (after negative clauses, &c. = 'if ever once'): if any body, si quis (enphatic).—si aliquis or quispiam (if any, be it who or what it may).—si quisquam or ullus (if there be any, which is very improbable: also when the meaning is that the statement is true, if there be but any of the thing in question, whereas there is much or are many, &c.: Pr. Intr. pp. 138). As if, ut though, quasi; tanquam si; ac si; velut si (with the subjunctive; and Eec.) that the Eng. must not mislead us: pugnat quasi contendat, he fights as if he contended, or were contending, pugnavit, quasi contendere, &c. Eec. not eui in Classical writers: as carefully, ut si, sic, quasi (C. Verr. 4, 54). Aft. many words, imply those denoting 'appearance, pretence, suspicion,' or the like, 'as if' is represented in Latin by accūs. and infm.; e. g. moveo nonnulli suspicionem velle me navigare; simulat se negotiare; also, videtur scire.—If only, see PROVIDED THAT. [In comparison, si; e. g. si quid generis istiusmodi me delectat, pictura delectat, if althg it is painting, i. e. painting pleases me as much as althg. [In asseverations or entrealties, si; e. g. moriar, si quidquam fieri potest elegantius.]

IMPORT, v. To bring goods into a country, invehere. importare (whether by waggons or ships).—Mean, vid. —It imports, what imports it? interest refert. See under IMPORTANCE.

IMPORT, s. Meaning, vid. —Importance, vid. —Imports (opp. exports), merces importatæ.—merces importatice (e. g. frumentum importaticum, Hist. B. Afr. 20).—merces adventicie (foreign; opp. domesticæ).—merces mari suppeditatæ (if imported fm over seas).

IMPORTANCE, gravitas (lit. weight; then importance, e. g. civitatis).—auctoritas (authority and influence in a state).—momentum. discernim (the point, circumstance, &c., on which all hinges; that makes all the difference). A person of i., vir gravis (fm weight of character); vir potens (fm power). An affair of i., res gravissima, summa, or maxima (g. it.); res magni momenti or discriminis (of great i. to the success of a thing). To be of great i., magni momenti esse; magni referre: to be of i., auctoritate valere or posse (of persons who have influence, power, &c.); vim habere or exercere (to exercise influence; of persons and things): to be a person of i., esse qm or qd (to be somebody). To make a thing of great i., ei rei vim tribuere; ei rei pondus asserere (to add weight to it): to represent a thing as of great i., verbis or oratione exaggerare qd (of giving it undue i.): a thing makes the question one of more i. in my eyes, qd mihi auct questionem: this is the point of most i., hoc caput or maximum or primum est: he considered this of more i., hoc ei antiquius fuit: he thought nothing of more i. than to &c., nihil (or neque quicquam) habuit antiquius, quam ut &c. (C., Fell.); thinking it a point of the utmost i. to &c., longe antiquissimum ratus &c. with inf. (L. 1, 32): he thought the difficulty of sufficient i. to demand the appointment of a dictator, res digna via est, propter quam dictator crearetur. It is of i. to a thing, that &c., qd ea interest or refert, but mea, tua, sua, instead of gen. of personal pron. See 1) interest, with gen. of person, denotes more the interest a person has in a thing; refert, the advantage he actually expects fm it, the i. he attaches to it. In the gold. age, ref. is found with the ablatives mea, &c., but not with the gen. of a substant; both verbs, however, occur absolutely, with the mention of the degree of i. 2) The thing that is of i. cannot be expressed, as in English, by a substant., but must be introduced by acc. and inf.; or, if no new subject is mentioned, by inf. only, or by a clause with ut, nē, or an interrogative pron. or particle. 3) The degree of i. is described by adverbs (magno, magis, maxime, minime, multum, permultum, plurimum, nihil, &c.), or by a gen. of price (as magni, permagni, parvi, pluri, tanti, quanti, &c.); thus, it is of the utmost i. to me that you should be with me, maxime nostrā interest, to esse nobiscum; he was perpetually thinking of what i. his death would be to P. Clodius, semper, quantum interest P. Clodii se perire, cogitabat; it is of great i. to me that I should see you, illud meo magni interest, te ut videam; of what i. is that to you? quid tuā id refert? [Ams. magni.]

IMPORTANT, a) Of persons, gravis (fm weight of character, and consequent authority, influence, &c.; also of witnesses, testes).—potens, pollens. qui multum potest (powerful). An i. person, vir magnus, gravis, or auctoritate gravis, auctoritate or dignitate praeditus, opibus or gratia florens (influential). To think himself as i. personage, sese qm or qd esse credere. b) Of things, gravis (opp. levis, trifling, unimportant).—magni or maximi momenti (having i. consequences).—magnus, gravis, luculentus (great, considerable). In comp. and superl. also by antiquior, antiquissimus (what should fm its importance be taken earlier or first into consideration; e. g., he considered this more i., id ei antiquius fuit; the most i. point or object, antiquissima cura). An i. city, urbs magna, opulenta, florens: an i. state, civitas ampla et florens or gravis et opulenta (opp. civitas exigua et infirma): to play an i. part, gravem personam sustinere. The most i. point is, hoc caput est, hoc maximum or primum est. For other phrases, see IMPORTANCE ('of great importance,' &c.).

IMPORTATION, invectio (C., opp. exportatio). Often by Crcl. with importare. To forbid the i. of wine, vinum omnino ad se importari non sinere: to forbid the i. of provisions fm Amania, commensus Amania importari in oppidum prohibere (Cæs.).

IMPORTED (of goods, &c.), importatus (e. g. ere utuntur importato, Cæs.).—inventus,—adventicius (opp. domesticus).—mari suppeditatus (C., if fm over seas).

IMPORTER, qui (merces, &c.) invenit or importat.

IMPORTUNATE, molestus (troublesome; e. g. in demanding a thing).—assiduus et acer (constant and eager in demanding a thing; e. g. flagitator, C.).—importunus (e. g., 'i. passions, importune libidines, C. See not applied to requests, &c.).—in rogando molestus.

IMPORTUNE, impense petere qd a qo, or followed by ut (to pray earnestly).—flagitare or efflagitare a qo or qm qd (to demand). To i. aly constantly, ea aures obsidere (to lay siege, as it were, to his ears, but implying that no other is listened to; L. 40, 20, extr.). instare ei de qd re (to press him); fatigare qm precibus, followed by ut (to weary with prayers); auribus ea abuti; assiduus precibus qd exigere (when a thing has been promised): to i. aly unmercifully, surdas ei orando reddere aures (Ter. Heaut. 2, 3, 89). To i. aly not to do a thing, deprecari qm, or deprecari qm insistere, ne quid faciat.

IMPORTUNER, flagitator molestus (if the importunity is annoying).—assiduus et acer flagitator (if the importunity is not annoying; both C.).

IMPORTUNITY, efflagitatio (C.).—efflagitatus, ūs (e. g. coacti atque efflagitatu meo, C. Ferr. 2, 5, 29; no where else).—proces assiduus.—precum constantia (T. Germ. 8, 1). See Not, of course, importunities; see Dict. To use i., fatigare aly precibus: to tire aly out by his i., fatigare aspe idem petendo qm (L. 40, 18). See To IMPORTUNE.

IMPOSE, See Lay upon (Ag.), imponere (e. pr., e. g. taxes, burdens, tasks, laws, names, a necessity, &c.).—injungere (e. g., taxes, a burden).—irrogare (e. g., multam [see FINE]; penam; also a tax, tributum, Plin.); alii ei qd. To i. duties on aly, ei officia injungere: to i. upon the states the necessity of carrying corn (into the camp), vecturas frumenti civitatibus describere (according to a written scale of the amount to be delivered by each). To i. upon aly the necessity, &c., ei necessitatem imponere (C. To i. it as a fault to aby, vitio dare, ducere, or vertere; as a crime, crimini dare, to i. it to pride, superbie ducere; to cowardice, ignaviae ducere or dare [USC] imputare is post-Class. Sen., Q., T., Plin.). to i. it to fear, qd timori assignare: you i. all this to me, haec tibi a me eveniunt. See ASCRIBE.

IN, 1) In answer to where? in what? in with abl. [USC] Since, however, in denotes only a part of the whole space, it is not expressed, but the abl. only used, when the space or place is not considered with ref. to any one part, but as a general specification; thus, he accuses Alexander in one of his letters, epistolâ quadam Alexandrum accusat (i. e., the accusation forms the general subject of the letter; C. Off. 2, 15, 53); but, he writes in one of his letters, scribit in literis (= he introduces the mention of this in one of his letters; Cae. B. G. 5, 49): in the book which I have entitled Hortensius, I have done my best to recommend the study of philosophy, cohortati sumus, ut maxime potuimus, philosophiam studium eo libro, qui est inscriptus Hortensius (the whole book treats of philosophy; C. de Div. 2, 1, 1): what these are (the duties of justice) has been stated in the preceding book, ea quae essent, dictum est in libro superiore (in one chapter of it [viz. Bk. 1, chap. 7] C. Off. 2, 13): in Greece, in Graeciâ: in the whole of Greece, totâ Graeciâ.—[USC] When a writer is quoted without mention of the particular work, 'in' is translated not by in, but apud (though Q. 9, 4, 18, uses 'in' in this way); e. g., it is written in Xenophon, apud Xenophontem scriptum est.—[USC] 'In' is also omitted before the names of towns: singular nouns of the first and second decl. being placed in the gen., others in the abl., without any preposition. The names of small islands follow the same rule, those of larger islands take the preposition; Z. 398.—[USC] If extension through a space is denoted, the Latins use per, as the Greeks ἐν: he had debts in every country, ea alienum per omnes terras.—The other instances in whch 'in,' in answer to 'where?' 'in what?' is translated by a simple case, will be found under the verbs after whch this occurs.—[USC] It may still be remarked, that 'in' before a subst. is often translated by a present participle: e. g., with a stick in his hand, baculum manu tenens (to stand by with a stick in his hand, cum baculo stare); in the sight of the army, inspectante exercitu: sts by an adj., as, Davaus in the play, Davaus comicus†: or by adv.: in earnest, serio; in truth, vere; in abundance, abundanter: or the Latins choose some other preposition, as, in joke, per jocum; in my presence, coram me. t-1. 'To have an excellent friend in such a person,' is habere qm bonum amicum (bon. amicum in qo habere would be absurd): to have found a courageous friend or foe in aby, qm fortem amicum or inimicum expertum esse (Np.). [USC] 'In ready money,' 'in gold,' &c., are expressed literally, at least in post-Aug. writers, in pecuniâ, in auro; qd Suet. Tib. 49; Galb. 8.

2) In answer to 'whither?' 'into what?' implying not merely rest in a place, but previous motion towards it; in with acc. [USC] With verbs of placing, setting, laying, &c. (ponere, locare, collocare, statuere, constituere), the following rest is principally considered, and 'in' with abl. used (Z. 489): only imponere (when it has not the dat. of the place where) and reponere only take 'in' with acc.: so also defigere (to fix in); describere, inscribere (to write or inscribe in); and insculpere (to engrave in) are followed by the acc. with 'in' (or by the dat.). [USC] Haase ad Reing., note 573, says that ponere in qd occurs only in the gc. sense in good authors; e. g. in historiam, C.: that imponere in qo loco is very rare (e. g. in equale impositus, Val. Max.); whereas imponere in navem or naves (regularly), in plaustrum, &c. For in ignem posita est (Ter. And. 1, 1, 102), Bentley's Cod. has imposita; but libros in ignem ponere, Sen. de irâ, 3, 23. The preposition may also fall away after many verbs compounded with in (e. g. ingredi urbem or in urbem). For these the verbs must be consulted.

3) With ref. to time; a) In answer to 'when?' in with abl. But here too, when the whole time is meant (as it usually is) the prep. is omitted, and the abl. only stands: in the present year, hoc anno; in our times, hac ætate. When the circumstances of the time, its dangerous character, &c., are to be noted, in is expressed; e. g. in hoc tempore = 'in this critical period,' 'in this time of distress'; so in illo tempore, hoc quidem in tempore: so when 'in time' = 'in good times,' in tempore is used, 'but in both cases the abl. alone also occurs'; Z. 475, note. In descriptions of a man's age, either the abl. only is used, or the particp. agens with the acc. of the time; in his eightieth year, octogesimo anno or octogesimum annum agens (cf. L. 39, 40): if the date refers to his death, either natus, with acc. of time, is used; or the gen. only, if closely joined with the subst.; e. g. Alexander died in his thirty-fourth year, decessit Alexander annos tres et triginta natus; or Alexander annorum trium et triginta decessit (Z. 397).

b) In answer to 'within what time?' abl. alone, or with in or intra. [Agamemnon—decem annis unam cepit urbem, Np. Senatus decrevit, ut ... in diebus proximis Italia decederet, S. Tarracenoq. paucis diebus pervenit, Cae. omnia commemorabo, quae inter or intra decem annos nefarie facta sunt, in these last ten years: intra nonum diem opera absoluta sunt, before nine days had expired.]—intra inter (inter marks only the duration of the time that has elapsed whilst athg was taking place, not the points fm whch to whch, whch is denoted by intra). [USC] In so many days, years, &c., after another event, is seriously translated: (I will do something) in eight days fm the date of this letter, octo diebus, quibus has litteras dabam; in four days fm his death, quatuor diebus, quo occisus est; I hope to see him in three days fm the date of this letter, qm triduo quam has dabam litteras, expectabam: so for years; tribus annis (or tertio anno) postquam venerat; post tres annos (or annum tertium) quam venerat; tribus annis or tertio anno, quam (or quum, or quo, quibus) venerat.

c) During what time, per (if the whole time is intended; e. g. the stars are visible in the night, per noctem cernuntur sidera: in these last few days, per hos dies, in the negative sentence; e. g. nulla ab te epistola venerat).—intra (within); with ref. to past time qui intra annos quatuordecim totum non fuissent, Cæs. B. G. 1, 36; omnia ... quæ inter quatuordecim annos postquam iudicia ad senatum translata sunt, nefarie flagitiosæque facta sunt, C. Ferr. 1, 13.

4) In respect of, with regard to; abt. only (to express a particular circumstance or limitation; e. g. square qm sapientiâ, in wisdom; meâ sententiâ, judgment, &c., in my opinion, judgement).—ab (apply of that in respect of which a man is strong, well or ill prepared, &c.; e. g. firmus ab equitate, strong in cavalry; ab omni parte beatus, in every respect).—ad (with ref. to an object or purpose: ad speciem magnificæ, splendidi in appearance; ad consilia prudens, wise in counsel; ad labores belli impiger, unwearyed in the labours of war, &c.).

5) Relations in which 'in' is translated by other prepositions, or by some of those already mentioned in other relations.

a) Ad (see 4).—(1) In the likeness, manner, &c. of, ad modum; ad effigiem, similitudinem, or speciem ca rei. (2) 'in comparison of; nihil ad hanc rem; ad hunc hominem.

b) apud: (1) 'in' an author (see 1).—(2) apud locum for in loco, 'very rare in C., very common in Tacitus; cf. Zumpt, and Orelli ad C. Ferr. 4, 48, cenam dabat apud villam in Tyndaritano; so apud forum modo e Davo audivi, Ter. Andr. 2, 1, 2.

c) penes qm est = 'is vested in; penes regem omnis potestas est.

d) per: per locum, in joke; per iram, in anger; per ridiculum, in a ridiculous manner.

e) secundum = (1) in accordance with, secundum naturam vivere (see b.). (2) in favour of, secundum qm decernere or iudicare.

f) ab. (1) ab initio, 'in the beginning,' not necessarily implying fm that time onwards; e. g. Consuli non animus ab initio, non fides ad extremum defuit.—ab initio huius defensionis dixi. (2) to be in our favour, a nobis facere (of a thing); a nobis stare (of persons). (3) = in consequence of, cum misericordiâ a recenti memoria perâdum auditu sunt; a superstitiosis animi (in consequence of his superstitious feelings; Curt.).

g) cum, before the name of a dress; majorem partem diei cum tunica pullâ sedere solebat et pallio; also, to do alth in contempt of us, cum contempnitione nostri qd facere (Cæs.).

h) ex, (1) before the name of that in which alth is cooked or drunk, &c. ex aquâ, vino, &c. coquere or bibere: (2) = 'in consequence of; 'in accordance with,' ex senatus consulto; ex testamento, &c.; e naturâ vivere (see e.). i) præ = 'in comparison of; Romam præ suâ Capuâ irridebat (cf. a.).

j) pro: pro portione, in proportion; pro ratâ parte, in a proper proportion.

k) in: (1) in length, breadth, &c., in longitudinem, latitudinem (see LEXON, BRADY). (2) qd in manibus habere, to have alth in hand = to be engaged upon it.—Now and then in with acc. is found where we should have expected in with abl., but only in a few political and legal expressions: in potestatem, amicitiam, ditionem, &c. esse or manere (C. Div. in Cæs. 20; in Ferr. 5, 30); mihi in mentem est, Com. [Benit. on Ter. Heaut. 2, 33].—(3) 'As far as in me lay,' quantum in me fuit, &c.

l) super = 'in addition to; super annonam bellum premit; super morbum etiam famas affectu exercitum. By an English idiom, an 'in' at the end of a clause, after an inf., may = 'in which,' and is to be translated by in quo (quâ, quo) or ubi; e. g. unless he should have a country to triumph in, nisi ... ubi triumpharet, easet habiturus. He had made choice of Piso's house, to reside in, Pisonis domum, ubi habitaret, legerat (C.).

6) With the participial substantive; quum, with the indicative (of two statements that are virtually identical, or of two actions that are necessarily inseparable; e. g. 'you do well in loving the child,' i. e. you loving the child is also doing a good action, premiare facis, quum puerum diligis; so, quum in portum dico, in urbem dico, in saying into the port, I virtually say into the city). My object in doing alth was &c., quod qd feci, eo pertinuit ut &c. (e. g. quod autem plures a nobis nominati sunt, eo pertinuit, quod &c., C.).

7) MISCELLANEOUS.—Hand in hand; to take in hand, have in hand, come or fall in abt's hands, &c.; see HAND. To die in abt's arms, inter manus cs expirare (g. i.); inter manus sublevantis extingui (of one who is raising the dying person's head); in ca amplexu embri (in abt's embrace). To buy alth in, licitatore

(to place a bidder; e. g. I will rather have it bought in than let it go for less, licitatore potius apponam, quam id minoris veneat, C.): it lies in the nature of the thing, ea est natura rei (C.): to carry abt away in one's arms, qm inter manus auferre: to march in square, ire quadrato agmine: to treat a subject in verse, de qd re versibus scribere: in the Greek language, qd Græco sermone or Græcis literis tractare: to do alth in the hope of alth, qd facere ad spem ca rei (e. g. urbem ad spem diuturnitatis condere). I am in hopes that &c., in spem venio, or magna me spes tenet &c., with inf., or acc. and inf.: to wound abt in the forehead, face, &c., vulnerare qm in frontem, in os (see not in fronte; cf. Cæs. B. G. 5, 35).

INABILITY, Crci. with facere qd non posse, &c.; or non potenter esse ca rei or ad qd faciendum. See INCAPABLE.—Impotentia can only be used either with a gen. iræ, animi, &c., in the sense of 'i. to restrain one's wrath, govern one's temper, &c. or absol. in the sense of 'weakness,' hinc intelligitur ... tacta impotentie exprobat, Q. 6, 2, 16. Se imbecillitas, infirmitas (weakness) may serve. || Inability to pay, Crci. with solvendo non esse; solvere non posse, non idoneum esse. See SOLVENT.

INACCESSIBLE, *inaccessus (post-Class.; Plin.).—aditu carens (which there is no approaching; e. g. saxa).—quo adire fas non est (which it is not lawful to approach). Somewhat i., difficilior aditu. I. to alth, impenetrabilis ci rei (not to be penetrated by it; e. g. specus imbribus). To make alth i., qd ex omni aditu claudere (to cut off all approach to it); qd obsepiere (to block it up; e. g. viam). || IMPROB. rari aditio (of a person who does not easily allow himself to be approached). LEARNER, discens; discipulus.

LEARNING, doctrina (q. t. as the quality of persons; also that which persons know, the thing itself).—eruditio (as the property of persons, with ref. to general knowledge; whereas doctrina refers rather to accurate and scientific attainments).—disciplinæ (single branches of l., the sciences).—literæ (l., so far as it is derived fm written sources).—scientia literarum or honestarum artium (knowledge of books or literary documents, of the fine arts; only subjectively, of the knowledge wch a person possesses. Rex's It would not be good Latin to use scientia without these genitives of the object, nor to use scientie for disciplinæ: scientia means 'knowledge,' and hence can never be used without something to render it more definite. In like manner literatura is bad Latin: it was used by the ancients only for 'a writing reil letters'; the signification of learning was attached to it fm a false reading in C. Phil. 2, 45, 116; see Uretli, N. c.).—humanitas (liberal education, so far as it relates to literature and the sciences). Studies wch presuppose varied l., studia que in quâdam varietate literarum versantur. Without any l., omnis omnino eruditiois expert et ignarus.

MAY (the month of), Maius (mensis).

MAY (perf. MIGHT); a) of permission: licet (it is permitted, or lawful by human law, positive, customary or traditional).—has est (with sup. in u or infin., it is permitted by divine law, including the law of conscience: opp. nefas est).—concessum est (g. t. including both the former).—jus or potestatem habere qd faciendi. integra mihi est potestas qd faciendi (a thing is still open to me: see C. Acad. 2, 3, 8).—integrum or liberum est mihi (with inf., it is free or open for me to do a thing: in the two last permission and possibility are, or may be, combined).—(1) When licet is followed by 'to be' with an adj. as predicate, the adj. is usually in the dat. by attraction: but sometimes in the acc., even when dat. is expressed, e. g. licuit esse otioso Themistocli: civi Romano licet esse Gaditanum. Zumpt, 601. Pr. Intr. 132. (2) After 'might' the Engl. perfect infin. is translated by the Latin present infin., unless the action marked by the infin. must have preceded that marked by licuit, &c. (3) Remember that 'he might' is, in a principal sentence, the indicative: 'he might have been,' licuit esse. [FIG.] May, 'might' of permission are also frequently translated by posse (the speaker implying that permission would be granted if it could). May I know? possum scire (as will you not tell me? e. g. quo profectus veneris, Plaut.). She may say this, hoc fas est dicere: if I m. say so, si fas est dictu (C.): if I may, si per vos licet (if you will permit me). May I licetne? If one might, si integrum ac liberum esset. You m. for a thing I care, per me licet: m. I ask? licet rogare? (C.): that they m. themselves sin the more easily, quo facilius ipso peccare licet. B) of possibility: posse.—licet or licet mihi (of the possibility or impossibility that proceeds from the state of things, the absence or presence of opponents or opposing causes; the preventive person or cause with per and acc.). Jn. possum et mihi licet. [See CAN.] That was the first year in which he might (= could be) elected Consul, is erat annus, quo per leges ei consulem fieri liceret: if the might have lived in freedom, si ei libere vixisse licuit fulset: live happily whilst you may (can), dum licet, vive beatus (H.): to do a thing as one best m., qd ut potest, facere (e. g. nos dignitatem, ut potest, retinebimus, C.): as you best m., ut poteris (e. g. rem expeditas, C.). The notion of 'might' is sometimes given by the subj. of a verb: he explained it so clearly, that all might understand it, rem tam perspicue explicuit, ut omnes intelligerent. [FIG.] The remark on the tense of the infin. holds good for potuit, &c., as well as for licuit; 7) of contingent possibility (or possibility granted by the speaker: = 'may possibly,' 'may for a thing I know'), fieri potest ut (with subj. e. g. I m. be mistaken, fieri potest, ut fallari: sit potest (impers. = 'it may be that') only (e. g. he may perhaps not have incurred that penalty, or fine, potest, ut illum multam non commiserit, C.).—Sit credibile est, verum haud dissimile est. factum esse potest, &c. Perhaps some one m. say, forsitan quisquam dixerit or dixerit q. When 'you' is used indefinitely for 'any one,' a man, the second pers. imperf. is employed, e. g. you might have believed, thought, said, crederes, putares, diceres.

MUST, a. (New wine), mustum.

MUST, v. is variously expressed, 1) by the participle future passive, to denote obvious necessity: e.g. we m. die, moriendum est: we m. confess that every animal is mortal, omne animal confitendum est esse mortale: the person by whom althg m. happen is expressed by the dative; rarely by a or ab, and that only when a second dative would occasion obscurity: e.g. every one m. use his own judgement, suusque iudicio utendum est: you m. consult respecting the property of many citizens, aguntur bona multorum civium, quibus a vobis consulendum est (here a vobis on account of quibus, in C. Manil. 2, 6; on the contrary, ib. 22, 64, two datives). If the verb be trans., the object is added in the acc., chiefly by unclass. authors, esp. by Varro; but by class. writers it is changed into the nom., the partic. being in the same gender: e.g. we m. strike into this path, huc via (nobis) ingredienda est (not hanc viam ingrediendum est): the orator m. regard three points, tria videnda sunt oratori. 2) By oportet (impers. 3rd), to denote necessity wch proceeds from grounds of reason or from the laws of justice, equity, or prudence. See an acc. with an inf. follows: sit a simple subjunct. (esp. if ambiguity is to be avoided): see Zumpt, § 625; Grotef. § 151, obs. 2; e.g. this man m. be bad, hunc hominem oportet esse improbum (I have my reason for believing it to be so): this m. (from internal reasons) and ought (on account of external advantage, &c.) to take place, hoc fieri et oportet et opus est: we m. despise nothing in war, nihil in bello oportet contemni: there are things wch one m. not do (ought not to do), even if they are permitted, est qd quod non oportet, etiam si licet: he who does not know the way to the sea m. take a river as his guide, viam qui nescit, qua deveniat ad mare, eum oportet amnem sibi querere: you m. love myself, not my property, if we are to be good friends, me ipsum amare oportet, non mea, si veri amici futuri sumus. 3) By debere (impers.), to specify the necessity wch marks a moral obligation, 'ought', in a subjective sense; e.g. you m. honour him as your own father, eum patria loco colere debes: we were moved by the misery of our allies; what m. we do now under our own sufferings? sociorum miseria commovebamur; quid nunc in nostro sanguine facere debemus? Since debere does not differ much from officium, the Latins frequently say for 'a person m.' officium est, and without officium simply est cs (but with this difference, that cs officium est is = it belongs to a person's obligations, whereas est cs is = it is suitable to any one); e.g. a foreigner m. mind only his own business, peregrini officium agere (i. e. peregrinus debet) nihil prater suum negotium agere: a good orator m. have heard and seen much, est boni oratoris (i. e. bonus orator debet) multa auribus acceperat, multa vidisse. This omission of officium is quite common in the expressions, I, thou, you m., meum, tuum, vestrum est. 4) By putare and existimare in rhetorical style, when the speaker courtously declines to anticipate the judgement of the hearer, but leaves it to them to draw their own conclusions: e.g. see to what a pass it m. come with the state, videte quem in locum rempublicam perventuram putetis (C. Rosc. Am. 53, 153; cf. Manil. 9, 26): how many islands m. be abandoned? quam multas existimatis insulas esse desertas? (C. Manil. 11, 32) 5) By opus est (impers. 3rd), to denote subjective need, or that from the doing of wch one expects advantage. It is followed either by the acc. and inf., or, if the person who m. do althg be named, by ut with a subj., or by the abl. of the perf. ptcp. pass.: e.g. if althg take place wch you m. know (i. e. wch it is your advantage to know) I will write, si quid erit, quod te scire opus sit, scribam: I m. wash myself, mihi opus est, ut lavem: I found that I m. look after Hirtius, opus fuit Hirtio convento (cf. Grotef. § 175, b; Zumpt, § 464, Obs. 1). Also, 'm. have or use althg' may be translated by mihi opus est, either impers. with the abl., or pers. with the nom. of that wch one m. have: e.g. we m. have a leader and guide, dux et auctor nobis opus est: we m. use your influence, auctoritate tua nobis opus est (cf. Grotef. § 175, a; Zumpt, § 464. 6) By necesse est (impers. 3rd), to denote strict or extreme necessity. It is followed either by an acc. and inf., or by a simple subj.: e.g. the mortal body m. perish some time or other, corpus mortale aliquo tempore perire necesse est: virtue m. abominate and hate vice, virtus necesse est vitium aspernatur et oderit: man m. die, homini necesse est mori. Also by necesse est we can express our 'm. necessarily have': e.g. buy not what you want, but what you m. necessarily have, emas non quod opus est, sed quod necesse est. 7) By cogit, to denote necessity arising from the will of voluntary agents; e.g. he found that he m. take away his own life (they forced him to do it), coactus est ut vita ipse se privaret: the Campanians found that they m. rush out at the gates, coacti sunt Campani portis egressi. Also the active cogere may be used in expressions such as 'not as he would, but as he found that he m. by the will of the soldiers,' non ut voluit, sed ut militum coegit voluntas. 8) Avoid the use of cogit, with ref. to necessity arising from circumstances. 8) By facere non possum, or simply non possum followed by quin, &c.; or by fieri non potest followed by ut non, &c.; or by non possum non followed by an infn., in the sense of 'not to forbear or abstain from,' of internal necessity: e.g. I m. cry out, non possum, quin exclamem: I m. thank you, non possum, quin tibi gratias agam: you m. have known him, fieri non potest, ut eum non cognoris: I m. confess that my joy is crowned, &c., non possum non confiteri, cumulari me maximo gaudio, quod, &c. 9) See there is no occasion for the adoption of any word or phrase distinctly corresponding to our 'must': e.g. Catulus found that he m. yield to his obstinacy, ejus pertinaciam cessit Catulus (Np. Han. 1, extr.). 10) Observe, moreover, the following forms of expression in wch the Latin idiom differs from the English: a) You m. (as an emphatic demand), either by the simple imperative or by fac ut, &c.; e.g. if you are not satisfied with this, you m. accuse your own injustice, hec si vobis non probabuntur, vestram iniquitatem accusatores: you m. keep up good spirits and good hope, magnum fac animum habes et bonam spem: you m. not (as an emphatic warning), fac, ne, &c. (cause that not, &c.)—cave, ne, &c. (take care, that not, beware of, &c.)—noli, with an infn. (be unwilling); e.g. you m. not wish, cave ne cupias: you m. not forget that you are Cicero, nolle te oblivisci Ciceronem esse: you m. not wish for an impossibility, nolite id velle, quod fieri non potest. b) If it m. be so (in the future), si res ita feret.

MUSTACHE, MUSTACHIO, s. (mystax, Gr.); Lat., barba labri superioris (see Plin. 6, 28, 32). To wear a m., barbam abradere praterquam in labro superiore (conf. Cae. B. G. 5, 14).

Lacedaemonius quidam, cuius nomen quidem proditum est. || Unspeakable, ingens, immensus (great, immense).—infinitus (infinite, endless).—incredibilis (incredible).

NAMELY, || As a particle of explanation, for the filling up of a foregoing general idea. In this case it is usually not translated, but the word following stands in apposition; e. g. if you would root out avarice, its parent must be rooted out, n. luxury, avaritiam alit tollere vultus, mater ejus est tollenda, luxuries (see Ramsh. § 95, 4). It is expressed by est or qui est; as, that most moving eloquence, n., the natural, 'maxime illa movens eloquentia, quae est naturalis, or naturalis ea est. For greater emphasis we may use dico or inquam (where the context allows the first person of the verb); e. g. the earlier orators, n., Crassus and Antonius, superiores oratores, Crassum dico et Antonium: for the rest, n., ourselves, aut birds, nam cetera turba, nos, inquam, comamuses avar (see Ramsh. § 95, 4). In subjoining a special idea as an explanation to a general one, we find et or que (affixed); e. g. at certain times, n., when duties or urgent circumstances require it, it will often happen that, &c., temporibus quibusdam, et aut officiis debitis aut rerum necessitatibus, saepe eveniet, ut, &c. (C. de Fin. 1, 10, 33). The disease, n., the plague, morbus pestilentiaque (L. 41, 21, 11; see Ramsh. § 188, 2; Drakem. L. 6, 16, 8.).—[not] In this sense we rarely find scilicet and videlicet; never nempe or nimirum. || For subjoining a whole proposition, which serves as an explanation or confirmation of the preceding, nam, enim, etenim (see Fox), quidem (in order to bring out more prominently a word going before, esp. the pronouns).—nimirum (stronger than the foregoing = evidently, as is well known, &c.). not but we can never so use nempe, scilicet, and videlicet.—nempe = 'surely, forsooth' is sarcastic or ironical; see Zumpt § 278.

NAMESAKE, eodem nomine (g. t., but esp. of the same sur- or family name; C. Ferr. 4, 46, 103).—eodem cognomine, or (poet. and post-Aug.) cognominis, adj. (of the same family name or title).—cognominatus (synonymous; e. g. cognominata verba; C.).

Latin; e. g. T. Ann. 16, 27; Hist. 2, 47: for this we find nullo, see Zumpt, § 676; Wb. § 226, A. 1; Störerb. ad Cic. Arch. 6, p. 96; ad Off. Comment. II.; Kühner ad Cic. Tusc. 5, 22, 63).—nemo homo (only in C.)—non ullus, non quisquam (none whatever, the former subst., the latter adj.)—no Roman, nemo Romanus (C.); no writer, nemo scriptor or nullus scriptor (C.)—Störerb. ad C. Off., refers nemo to quality, and nullus to quantity, so that nemo scriptor = nemo scriptor quascunque est; nullus scriptor = nullus scriptor, quot sunt).—When nullus and nemo are used as participles, i. e. when 'no' is opposed to the other parts or to the whole, they frequently take a gen.; e. g. no mortal, nemo mortalium: no animal is wiser, nulla belluarum prudentior est; but for the gen. we may use ex a Crk. with de, ex; e. g. none of ours felt, nemo de nostris recidit. Nihil is often apparently used for nullus and nemo (with a gen. when for nullus); but there is this difference, that nihil gives emphasis to the negative sense; e. g. none is more unfortunate than I, none more fortunate than Calulus, nihil me infortunatius, nihil fortunatius est Catulo: to demand no reward (at all), nihil præmit expetere: to have no doubt (at all), nihil dubitationis habere. We frequently use 'no' when a particular, not a general, idea is to be negated. In this case, wech occurs esp. when 'no' belongs to a word signifying property, or to the determination of the predicate of a subst., instead of nullus the Latin uses the simple negative non; e. g. I know that I bring no very pleasant intelligence, acio non jucundissimum nuntium me vobis allaturum: *no snow falls on the open sea, nives in alto non cadunt: they had no honey, mel non habent. In like manner 'no' is expressed in Latin by non when the English object with its verb is denoted in Latin by one verbal expression: e. g. to have no fear, non timere: to have no hesitation, non dubitare: to entertain no hatred towards any one, non odisse qm, &c. And no, a= no, et nullus, nec ullus (adj.); nec quisquam (subst.): no single one, nemo quisquam; nemo unus: no single person, homo nemo; nemo unus: in no place, nusquam nullo loco (K²) nullus is not Ciceronian, but is used only by Virg.; nusquam is not Latin; at no time, nunquam; nullo tempore: and at no time, nec umquam: in no respect, nihil (see Zumpt, § 677): by no means, nullo modo, nulla ratione (in no manner): neutiquam, nequaquam, haudquaquam, haud (with adjectives); minime (not at all); minime, minime gentium, minime vobis, minime quidem (not at all, on no account; in contradictions and answers): nihil minus (nothing less; as a negative reply). [K²] *Nulatenus is very late.

NOTABLE, notabilis; insignis.

NOTABLY, notabiliter; insigniter.

NOTARY, "publicus fidei scribe; *scriba publicus; or, if necessary, notarius (as i. t.), when the context determines the sense; but notarius with the ancients was a short-hand writer.

NOTE, v. notare (to put down in writing; also to observe as remarkable; but in the latter sense not till aft. Augustus: there is no authority for its use in the sense of 'to make an explanatory observation').—annotare (to mark down in writing; then esp. to make a corrective or explanatory remark, although it occurs thus for the first time aft. Augustus; see Plin. In bad o., nonnulla infamia aspersus: to be in bad o., minus commode audire; minus commode esse existimatione; (with aby) magnâ in offensâ esse apud qm (C.).

OF, || As a sign of the genitive, or denoting possession is usually expressed by the gen. case in Latin. ~~Ab~~ Ab with an abl. instead of the gen. is poet., e. g. dulces a fontibus undæ (V.). || Denoting origin, beginning, or cause; we sometimes find e or ex; de: but the prep. is used only for the sake of emphasis or perspicuity; for the most part, 'of' is expressed by the simple genitive; e. g. rex Macedonum

Macedonum, king of Macedon. *Sis 'of' is expressed by the use of an adj.; e. g. a citizen of Athens, civis Atheniensis. In the titles of nobility it is better than de; but it is generally best to employ an adj.; e. g. dux Guisui, the Duke of Guise.—To die of a disease, perire a morbo (see Bremi, Np. de Regg. 3, 3): to die of wounds, ex vulneribus perire.—When 'of' refers to the material of wch a thing is made, it is usual not to employ the prep. alone, but to make it dependent on a ptepl., as factus, expressus, or the like; e. g. poculum ex auro, better poculum ex auro factum; or by the use of an adj., poculum aureum. ~~Ab~~ The prep. must not be used when speaking of things as consisting of a certain material: in this case the material must be denoted by an adj., or by a subst. in the gen. case; e. g. mountains of gold, montes auri, or montes auri. || Denoting the quality or property of a thing. When a property is considered as manifest or apparent, and so as existing according to the mind or judgement of a spectator, the abl. must be employed; e. g. puella pulchra formâ, of a beautiful figure; but when the property is characteristic, and considered as inherent in the subject, then we find the gen. Hence all descriptions of a thing with ref. to its size, weight, age, &c., have the gen.: e. g. pedum quindecim fossa: homo fervid ingenti; vir magni judicii et summæ facultatis. || In denoting the part of a whole, usually ex, more rarely ab; e. g. nonnulli ab novissimis, some of (Cæs.). || Concerning, respecting, de. What must be thought of those who...? quid de his existimandum, qui &c.? || Out of, ex; inter (among). || Before the name of a town as the native place of a person, 'of' is usually expressed by an adj. of the name of the place instead of a prep.; e. g. Lycurgus of Sparta, Lycurgus Spartanus; Pericles of Athens, Pericles Atheniensis. The prep. is used in aia, but rarely, used; as L. 1, 50, Turnus ab Aricia for Turnus Aricinus. ~~Ab~~ This mode of writing is almost peculiar to L. || *Sis 'of' is expressed in Latin by the form of constructio; e. g. to smelt of a thing, sapere rem: of high birth, natus summo loco: of one's own accord, sponte meâ, tuâ, &c. ~~Ab~~ The city of Rome, urbs Roma (in appos., not Romæ). || The following instances show how to translate 'of' before the participial substantive. (1) By infin.: let no one repent of having preferred, ne quem poeniteat sequi maluisse &c.: I don't despair of there being some one, non despero fore qm. (2) quod with subj.: I think he should repent of having given up his opinion, ego illi, quod de sua sententiâ decessisset, poenitendum censeo: they accused Socrates of corrupting, Socratem accusarunt, quod corrumperet. (3) Instead of reading, he does so and so, quum possit or quum debeat legere (according as the thing not done was a possibility or a duty): why do you cry instead of laughing? cur rides a non potius lacrimaris? || MICELLÆZEUS. To ask or enquire of aby, quærere qd ex [a, de] qo: to consist of athg, ex qâ re constare, consistere; also, of numbers, esse with gen. To be made of athg, ex qâ re factum, constitutum esse: one of, unus ex, less cmly de.

OFF, || Denoting separation or distance, ab eo (â, &c.); de eo (â, &c.). But we usually find a (ab), or de in composition with a verb; as, to drive off, avehi; devehit: to bear off, ferre, auferre (prop. and fig.); deportare, reportare, consequi, adipisci (fig. to get, acquire, obtain, as victory, fame, &c.); to carry off, ferre, auferre (to acquire, obtain)—obtineere (to obtain something wished for).—ex eâ re servare (to save, deliver): to come off, elabi, evadere (e. g. to come off with his life, vivum or salvum evadere: vivum exire): to come off with a light punishment, lævi penâ defungi: to come off unpunished, impune abire: sine penâ demitti: to come off fortunately, pulchre discedere (comic): to drive off, abigere, depellere: to go off, abire, discedere; auferre, profugere (to flee away; the latter espily in a secret manner): to lead off, abducere: to make off, se proripere; se eripere; in pedes se conjicere (to take to one's heels; comic): to make off secretly, profugere; clam auferre; clabtrare: to make off (to sneak off); clandestinâ fugâ se subtrahere. || As an interj., Away! away with! tolle, tollite, aufer, auferite (take away! see F. Eun. 8, 439, tollite cuncta, inquit, captos auferite labores).—abi! apage tel (go away!) off with you! amove te hinc! abi in malam rem! (= go and be hanged! comic): pi., off with you! procul este!

OMOPATE, scapula; usually pl. scapulae.

ON, prep. § (Of place or situation), to the question 'where?' in, with abl., e. g. to place on the table, ponere in mensa (hence not mensam, because the idea of rest is already included in ponere, according to the Roman conception of the word).—super with abl. (of a surface on weh athg is).—ad (near; e. g. ad Tiberim habere hortos, on the Tiber).—In many cases where we think of a thing as at rest, the Romans fix on the previous direction and motion, and hence our 'on' is to be rendered by ex, de, also by a (ab); e. g. on a march or journey; ex itinere (also in itinere; yet with this difference, that in itinere = during the march, ex itinere = from the march, so that it was uninterrupted for some time; see Held, Cæs. B. C. 1, 24): on the right, on the left, a dextra, ab sinistra: on the side, a latere: to fight on the walls, de mœnibus pugnare: 'On' is expressed by the abl. alone, a) with substantives of place; e. g. to post armed men on the walls, muris armatos disporre (see Held, Cæs. B. C. 1, 21). b) in expressing a means and instrument which in Latin is already within the relation of the abl. case: as, to ride on a horse, equo vehi: to blow on a pipe, tibialis canere: c) when the Latin preposition is already expressed in a compound verb; as, to sit on horseback, equo insidere. Observe also the following turns of expression: on the platform, pro rostris; pro suggestu (see Zumpt, § 311): on the spot, e vestigio; statim; confestim (immediately); on the ground, humi (hence in humum only in poetry); on all sides, quoquoque; to hang on a tree, pendere ex arbore; on your authority, tua auctoritate; te auctore: on this condition, hæc lege or conditione: to be on any one's side, stare, facere, sentire, esse ab quo. § (Of time), to the question 'when?' by the simple abl.: on the fourth day, quarto die; on the day, die; on the morning, mane; sometimes employ quum; as, on the day that I thanked you, eo die, quum tibi gratias agerem. With a definite term or point of time at weh athg is to take place, ad is used; e. g. to appear on a (fixed) day, ad diem convenire.

ONCE, An adverb of time, one time, semel: o. one is one, unitas semel posita unitatem facit: o. for all, semel (e. g. ut semel dicam, see Spald. Q. 5, 13, 3): o. more, iterum (of an action repeated).—denovo, de novo (anew, afresh): o. already, semel jam: o., or at least not often, semel aut non sæpe certe: more than o., sæpius; plus semel, plus quam semel (hence Krebs says that plus quam semel, plus semel, do not occur; but they do occur, yet perhaps only in negative sentences; e. g. uterque—non plus quam semel eloquetur, C. Off. 3, 16, 51; Lucullus puer apud patrem nunquam lautum convivium vidit, in quo plus semel Graecum vinum daretur, Varr. ap. Plin. 1, 14; Id ille non plus quam semel usurpare sustinuit, Vell. 2, 40; hinc plus vice simplicis is poet.): o. and again, semel atque iterum (Cæs.); semel iterumque; semel et sæpius (C.); non semel (i. e. not once only): o. a year, semel in anno: not o., non semel; ne semel quidem: at o., repente, subito (suddenly).—simul (at the same time; see L. 6, 4).—una (together): to do two things at o., de eadem fidelia duos parietes dealbare (Curio ap. C. Ep. 7, 29, extr.): all at o., omnes simul (all together).—omnes universi (all taken together): one at o., singuli, unus post alterum (each one singly, one after the other, with several in succession). At once may also be expressed by the use of distributive numerals; e. g. not more than three at o., non amplius quam terni: o. for all, semel: but o., never but o., semel adhuc; semel unquam: o. and again, o.—then, semel—iterum; semel—deinde. § As an adverb of time, aliquando and (after the particle ne or si) simply quando (at one time, at some time or other, of time past or future weh one does not specify more closely; opp. nunquam).—quondam (o., o. is time past, the nearer definition of weh is of no concern; opp. nunc; as, that virtue o. existed in this state, fuit, fuit ista quondam in hæc republica virtus).—olim (o., in time past, or in time to come; opp. nunc, nuper; hence the proper word in fables and narratives): if o., at quando, and simply quando quandoque (in case that o., &c.).—quum (then, when; see C. Cat. Maj. 10, 34): For o. may be (in entreaties, &c.) be translated by obsecro, queso (pray): put yourself for o. in my place, fac, quæro, qui ego sum, esse te: o. upon a time, olim (hence Semel as an adverb of time belongs for the most part, according to Bruni Np. Alc. 15, 2, to the later period).

ONE, adj. § Opp. to two or more, unus (used also for unius and idem; necessarily in the plural with substantives weh have no singular).—unkus (single one, one and no more).—idem (when several actions or circumstances are to be referred to the same subject.—alter (Trepor, of things which exist only in pairs; e. g. altero pede claudus): to become one of several, unum fieri ex pluribus: I will still observe one thing, unum illud addam: that is not a matter for one man, illud in unius hominis prudentiam cadere non potest (Col. 5, 1, 1): this one thing disturbs me, that &c., me una hæc res torquet, quod &c.: the gods have not given every thing to one man, non omnia eidem dii dederunt; in one word, uno verbo (if only one word follows; see C. Phil. 2, 22, 54).—ut paucis dicam (if only a few words follow): in one sentence, continenter (without interruption): ~~non~~ continuo is wrong).—usque (continually).—uno tenore (in one course): not one, ne unus quidem, non ullus, nemo unus (not even a single one).—non unus, unus et alter item, nonnemo (not one, but several): not one of us, nemo de nobis unus: not one of them, si nulli: never a one, nunquam ullus: one and another, unus et alter; unus alterque (two together).—nonnemo, unus et item alter (several): one after the other, alius post alium, alius ex alio, alii super alios, alius atque alius, alius subinde (q. 4.).—alter post alterum (of two).—deinceps (in uninterrupted succession, of space, time, and order: it is usually placed between the substantive and predicate or pronoun; e. g. horum deinceps annorum).—continenter (only before and after the class period).—continue (continually, without intermission; not to be confounded with continuo = immediately thereupon without interruption).—The Latin also expresses it by continuo = following one another; e. g. triduum continuum; dies continuos tres; singuli deinceps (each one successively).—alternis (of two, alternately; e. g. alternis [ac. versibus] dicere; alternis versibus contendere): one as well as the other, uterque pariter, ambo pariter (both equally): the one ... the other, alter (rarely unus) ... alter; hic ... ille (this ... that).—prior ... posterior (the former ... the latter): the one (party) ... the other, alii ... alii; alii ... pars (or partim); pars ... alii; quidam ... alii: the one (party) ... the other ... others again, alii ... alii (or partim) ... alii (and thus alii alternatim with partim, eight times in C. N. D. 2, 47, 122): one ... to the other, or the other (acc.), alter ... alteri or alterum (of two).—alius ... alii or alium (of several; e. g. one helps the other, alter alterum or alius alium adiuvat).—If however 'other' be connected with a substantive, the substantive is repeated in Latin; e. g. to remove from one house to another, ex domo in domum migrare: one citizen obeys the other, idem civi parat: one hand washes the other, manus manum lavat or fricat: one fears the other, timet inter se: happy at one time, unhappy at another, alius beatus, alius miser: the one this ... the other that, alius alius; alii alia: the one no, the other differently, alius alter: one here, another there, alius alibi: one hither, another thither, alius alius: one time so, another time differently, alius alias: both the one party and the other are threatened with dangers, but from different quarters, alii aliunde est periculum.—If 'one' refer to a substantive previously mentioned, it is rendered by unus (opp. to two or more) or qs (if indefinite): as, there were several elephants there; have you seen one? plures aderant elephantum; num unum vidisti? here are your books; have you read one of them? hic sunt tui libri; num qm ex tuis legisti?—If by 'one' an individual is emphatically denoted and singled out from a multitude, unus is used, usually with the preposition ex or de, or the meaning is expressed by a simple ex or inter; as, there was among them one of the Nervians, named Verticus, erat intus unus Nervius, nomine Vertico: Fufus, one of my intimate friends, Fufus, unus ex meis intimis: to command one of the chief leaders of sedition to be taken away, abripi unum inaginem ducentem seditionum jubere: the leader himself, one of the most rash and daring, dux ipse inter stolidissimos ferocissimoque. || To denote agreement, concurrence, &c., one and the same, unus, idem; Jx. unus atque idem; unus idemque; e. g. at one time (to do several things, &c.): uno or eodem tempore; uno eodemque tempore: it is all one, idem est, par est (see C. Muren. 19, 41); if followed by 'whether ... or', nihil interest utrum ... an (see C. Rosc. Am. 41, 120): it is not one and the same thing, to rob and to fight, alius est rapere, alius pugnare (L. 1, 12. cf. C. Cael. 3, 6). || A denoting time, and (more rarely) a measure, unus is usually omitted, unless an opposition of a greater number be implied; e. g. the matrons mourned for Brutus one whole year, as for a father, matronæ annum, ut parentem, Brutum luxerunt: not more than one bushel, non plus modio: it seemed to be all one blaze, omnia velut continenti flammâ ardere visa (Curt. 3, 8, 18; cf. Hist. B. G. 6, 15, extr.). || One and a half, unus dimidiatusque; sesquialter. The Latin forms many compounds with sesqui; e. g. a foot and a half, in length, sesquipedalis: an inch and a half, sesquidigitus: of an inch and a half in length, sesquidigitalis: a pound and a half, sesquillibra: a bushel and a half, sesquimodius: an acre and a half, sesquijugerum: an hour and a half, sesquihora: a month and a half, sesquimensis: to be a month and a half old, sesquimensis esse natus: a day and a half's work, sesquidopera: one year and a half, sex mensium et anni spatium (Georgics); unus annus cum dimidio, or et sex menses (Kraff).

ONE, pron. indef. || Denoting an indefinite individual out of a definite number, a ny one, aliquis; unus aliquis (emphatically implying that the individual is only one); e. g. one of you, qs ex vobis: one of the early kings, qs prorum regum: one of yours, unus qs ex tuis: one of the party, vir factionis.—If = a certain one, a definite individual, whom one may not, or will not name, quidam; as, one of the colleagues, quidam de collegis.—But if 'one' is = any one, i. e. denotes an indefinite individual out of an indefinite number, we find quispiam, also aliquis; e. g. one may perhaps say, forsitan quispiam dixerit; dixerit hic qs (poet.): one will prove call me unjust, iniquum me esse quispiam dicet: one will say so, dicet qs forte.—a) after si, nisi, ne, num, quando, ubi, and generally, in conditional propositions, also without the conjunction, quis must be used instead of qs or quispiam; as, if any one has once sworn falsely, non credit should afterwards be given to him, ubi semel quis pejeraverit, ei postea credi non oportet: b) In negative propositions, and in such as contain a neg. tense, (any) 'one' is expressed by quisquam (substantively) and ullus (adjectively); e. g. is there among men any one of whom you think better? estne quisquam omnium mortalium, de quo melius existimes tu? is there one thing of so much worth, or one thing so desirable, that &c., an est ulla res tanti, aut commodum ullum tam expetendum, ut &c.: just as good ... as (any) one, tam ... quam qui maxime; e. g. I am as good a patriot as any one, tam sum amicus reipublice, quam qui maxime: or by juxta ac (atque) &c.; e. g. instructed in Greek and Roman literature as well as any one, literis Græcis atque Latinis juxta ac doctissimè eruditus (i. e. as the most learned). Since however the Romans do not express our 'one' in its full extent; we must frequently express the sense by other words or phraseology: 1) by the passive; 1) personally; if one is guilty of a fault, si qua culpa committitur: one cannot live happily, except by living virtuously, non potest jucunde vivi, nisi cum virtute vivatur: it is foolish for one to fear what cannot be avoided, stultum est timere id quod vitari non potest; 2) impersonally; one lives, vivitur: evening is coming on; one must go home, jam advesperascit, domum revertendum est; 3) by ablatives absolute; if one assumes this case, hoc positò. 1) by the active; 1) the third person singular; a) of impersonal active verbs; e. g. one ought, oportet; one may, licet; b) one says, inquit (parenthetically); e. g. it is impossible, says one, that all anger can be eradicated from the mind, non potest, inquit, omnis ira ex animo tolli. 2) the first person plural, when the speaker includes himself under the unknown subject; e. g. what one wishes one gladly believes, quæ volumus, credimus libenter: 3) the second person singular indicative, subjunctive or imperative, in impassioned exhortations, demands, and statements; e. g. one does not see God, yet he may be recognized as God by his works, Deum non vides, tamen ut Deum agnoscas ex operibus ejus. Reply, the second person singular in the subjunctive, where we say, one can, might, would have; e. g. one might have seen, videres: one would have believed, putares; 4) the partic. present mazo. in general propositions; e. g. if one aims at the first place, it is commendable to attain to the second or third only, prima sequentem, honestum est in secundis et tertis consistere. c) If the English 'one' is in Latin the subject of the infin., it is not expressed separately; e. g. humanity requires that one pardon his friend, ignoscere amico humanum est.—But with the infin. esse, and with those verbs which in the passive have two nominatives (of the subject and predicate), as, videri, fieri, existimari, we find, at least, the acc. of the predicate; e. g. the greatest riches, is for one to be contented with his lot, maxime sunt divitiæ, contentum suis rebus esse.

ONE ANOTHER, alius alii or alium; of two, alter, alteri or alterum (= one ... the other); Inter se, among or between themselves, is used when the predicate is referred only to the personality of a subject of the third person plural, named in the same clause, in the nom. or acc.

rare, rarely in any other. ¶ se inter se is not Latin; see Gernh. C. Lat. 22, 82; Hand, Tursell, 3, p. 387, sq.).—Inter ipsos (among themselves, when the predicate of a proposition is to be referred to such a subject exclusively, and in opposition to all others; the subject is then mentioned in the same clause, either in the gen., dat., or abl., or in the clause immediately preceding).—mutuo (mutually); ¶ Invicem here would be unclear, vicissim has a different meaning).—ultra et citro, ultra citroque, ultra citro (hither and thither, on both sides). ¶ Ultra citro is probably post Aug.; see Hand, Tursell, 2, p. 86, sq.). they help one a., alter alterum adjuvat; alius alii subditiū ferunt: they keep nothing from one a., nihil quidquam secretum alter ab altero habet: they (two armies) did not observe one a., neutri alteros cernebant: they blamed one a., alius alium increpabant: to love one a., amare inter se; inter se diligere (¶ Invicem or mutuo diligere not class.: vicissim diligere, formed by the moderns from the misunderstood passage, C. Lat. 9, 30, is wrong): we love one a., amamus inter nos (¶ not amamus nos inter nos): to look at one a., to fear one a., &c., inter se aspicere, timere, &c.: to strike one a., alter alterum verberibus cedit (prop., with cudgels).—inter se confingere (fig., of battle): to be at variance with one a., inter se discordare, dissidere, dissentire: to kiss one a., mutua dare oscula: to kiss and embrace one a., osculari et amplexari inter se (Plaut. Mil. Glor. 5, 40): to render services to one a., officis mutuo respondere; to eat one a., mutua carne inter se vesci: to meet one a., sibi occurrere or obviam fieri: to show kindness to one a., ultra citroque beneficia dare et accipere: to send messengers to one a., nuncios ultra citroque mittere.

ONE-EYED, luscus, cocles (born with one eye).—altero oculo captus or orbis (that has lost one eye).—altero lumine orbis (Plin. 35, 10, 36).—unoculus (g. l. one-c.; mostly in Com. writers). ¶ Avoid the later compound monoculus).—unum oculum in mediā fronte habens; uno oculo in mediā fronte insignis (having one eye in the middle of the forehead; of the Cyclopes).

ONE-HANDED, unimānus.—alterā manu orbis (Afr. Plin. 35, 10, 36, altero lumine orbis).

ONE-HORSE CARRIAGE, *currus uni equo jungendus or iunctus; *currus ab uno equo vehendus or vectus.

ONE-SIDED, PROPRIUM unum latus habens. FIG.) non iustus: to decide from one-s. evidence, parte inaudita alterā statuere: to form a one-s. judgement on a matter, rem non ab omni parte ponderare: to treat a subject in a one-s. manner, leviter attingere.

ONEROUS, See BURDENSOME.

ONLY, ¶ Denoting limitation or restriction, modo (subjective, denoting that one who speaks or thinks on a matter restricts it in his own mind to a certain case, or within certain limits).—tantum (prop., so much and no more, implies that the term which it qualifies bears the relation of the less to a greater, or of a part to a whole, to which it stands opposed).—solum (o., merely: restricts to a certain case or object, in contradistinction to all others).—tantummodo (o. in so far as; restricts more strongly than tantum or modo, approximating to the meaning of the former, etc. of the latter: ¶ Avoid solummodo, which is very rare, and not found at all in the best prose).—non ... nisi (= 'not except under the condition specified': hence not used of numbers). ¶ In the best prose nisi is preferred to the condition, and the non [for which some other negative, neque, nihil, numquam, may stand] to the verb; e. g. it is o. by an artist that art can be understood, are intelligi nisi ab artifice non potest: he dreads o. a witness and a judge, nihil timet nisi testem et iudicem).—dumtaxat (= dum taxat qd., 'strictly speaking', restricting a sentiment by some special reference; often preceded by sed).—nihil aliud quam, quid aliud quam, nihil aliud praequam (= 'he only &c.', 'he did nothing but &c.', a tense of facere being omitted; e. g. he o. sleeps, nihil aliud quam dormit: see Zumpt, § 771; but ¶ this is peculiar to the style of the later historians).—The foregoing words and phrases are used when the restriction relates only to an action or a state; but when 'only' refers to a subject or object which it separates from all others, we find solus or unus, e. g. it is o. man who is endowed with reason, solus homo ratione praeditus est: I have seen o. you, te unum vidi: it is o. wisdom that &c., sapientia est una quae &c.: I o. have seen, ego solum or unus vidi (but, I have o. heard, not seen, i, haec audivi tantum, non vidi): not o. ... but also, non modo ... sed etiam or verum etiam (proceeding usually from the less to the greater, or from the weaker to the stronger).—non tantum or non tantum modo ... sed etiam (from the greater to the less = 'not only, but even').—non solum ... sed etiam (leaving it undetermined which is the greater).—et ... et (as well ... as).—We sit find non modo ... sed or verum; non tantum (or tantummodo) ... sed or verum; non solum ... sed (without an et or etiam: the second clause is then the stronger, the other being, as it were, put aside; see Pr. Introd. II. 504: the second clause may sit be strengthened by transposition; e. g. Dili quoque, non solum homines): not o. not ... but not even, non modo non ... sed ne ... quidem (¶ where observe, if both clauses are affected by the same verb, expressed in the second clause, the non after modo is omitted, its place being supplied by the ne in the second clause, since ne ... quidem is = etiam non; e. g. talis vir non modo facere, sed ne cogitare quidem quidquam audebit quod non honestum sit. But if the negative is contained in a negative word, such as 'none, never,' &c., then the word none, nullus, nihil, numquam, &c., must be retained: e. g. quod non modo Scilicet modo, sed ne Sicilia quidem tota potuisset; cf. Zumpt § 724, 81.—o. in so far, that, dumtaxat hactenus, ut o. so much, or so far, as, tantum ... quantum (see C. Ecl. p. 121. Herz. Cae. B. G. 2, 8). ¶ Expressing a condition, modo: e. g. I will speak, o. do you hear, loquar, modo audi: o. that, modo ut &c., or modo with the subjunctive; if o., dummodo; or dum with the subjunctive: if o. not, dumne; dummodo ne with the subjunctive. ¶ Expressing a wish, will, or permission, modo.—quiesco (as a parenthesis, I pray): o. let me, sine modo: o. wait, mane modo: o. begone, abi modo: o. not, modo ne; e. g. modo ne redeat: in addressing persons, with the language of vehement deprecation, or earnest warning, this may be rendered by noli with an infin., or by fac ne, or (in warnings) cave, with the subjunctive.

OR, aut; vel; ve (enclitic).—SIVE (or seu; rare in C.; common in poets and later prose writers). AUT stands in disjunctive sentences when one clause is entirely opposed to the other; vel when the opposition is only partial; ve is usually connected with single words, not with clauses, denoting reciprocal exclusion; sive, seu, or si, with vel, implies a condition, and its denotes a difference merely in name or in the form of expression; e. g. audendum est qd universalis, aut omnia singulis patienda (L. 6, 18); de nostris rebus satis, vel etiam nimium multa (C. Fam. 4, 14, 3); non sentiunt viri fortes in acie vulnera; vel, si sentiunt, se mori malunt (C. Tusc. 2, 24, 58); esse dico ea quæ cerni tangere possunt (C.); Minerva sive Tritonia. We may say that aut distinguishes, vel co-ordinates, sive denotes synonymy, ve is a milder vel. Aut distinguishes things and expressions which are diametrically opposed to each other, or at least are considered as widely different; vel implies that it is indifferent which of several things takes place, or which of several propositions is affirmed; it matters not whether they be different or alike; vel for the most part distinguishes only single words, more rarely whole clauses; and when it does so it implies only a slight or nominal distinction: sive is used, 1) when, with ref. to one and the same subject, a choice is given between several names and predicates; or 2) when a speaker or writer, himself in doubt or suspense, leaves the choice with the hearer or reader. || In interrogative sentences (whether)... or: utrum... an (or anne or ne)—num... an.—NŪ (enclitic).—AN (seld. ne... ne, as Cæs. B. G. 7, 14); e. g. utrum ignorant dil, quæ res maxime sint, an vim non habent quâ tantas res sustinere et gerant? (C. N. D. 2, 30, 77).—QUÆRITUR unusne mundus sit, an plures? (C. Div. 2, 4, 11).—OR not? necne; an non; e. g. dil utrum sint, necne sint, queritur? (C. N. D. 3, 7, 17).—FIAT necne fiat id queritur? (C. Div. 1, 39, 86).—ROGA velint uxorem an non? (Ter. Hec. 4, 1, 43).—NŪ Necne is used only in indirect questions, and generally without a verb; annon for the most part in direct questions, with or without a verb. Either —or, aut—aut; vel—vel; sive—sive; or seu—seu: SIVE—SIVE usually with the indic., unless the sense requires a subjunctive. More under WHETHER.

ORACLE, oraculum (the place, or the answer).—ORA (oraculi; C.).—RESPONSUM oraculi or sortium (or simply, where the context fixes the sense, responsum). An o. of the Delphian Apollo, quod Apollo Pythius oraculum edidit; oraculum Pythium or Pythicum; vox Pythica or Pythia: to pronounce or utter an o., oraculum dare, edere, fundere; qd oraculo edere (of the thing uttered): at the command or by the advice of the o., oraculo edere; oraculo jubente, præcipiente, respondente: to consult an o., oraculum petere (with a qd if the Deity is named): to send to Delphi to consult the o., mittere Delphos consultum or deliberatum. ORACULUM is also used improp., domus jurisconsulti est oraculum totius civitatis.

ORACULAR, by CREL. with oraculum; e. g. to receive any's words as o., quæ qs dixerat, oraculi vice accipere (T. Ann. 6, 21, 4); hæc ex oraculo Apollinis Pythi edita tibi putas (as oracular; C.). Muretus says 'sententiam cs propemodum in oraculi loco et numero habere'.

When 'possibility' denotes the presence or existence of a thing, we must use a Crci. with esse posse; e. g. he denies the p. of this idea, negat esse posse hanc notionem; so also when 'possibility' denotes that a thing is capable of being accomplished, fieri or effici posse; e. g. they deny the p. of a thing, qd fieri posse negant: not to perceive the p. of a thing, non intelligere, qd fieri posse or qua ratione qd fieri posse: if there be any p., si potest (sc. fieri); see POSSIBLE. A possible thing, res, quae fieri potest.*

POSSIBLE, quod fieri or effici potest (that may happen or can be done).—quod per rerum naturam admitti potest (that is not against the nature of things). These words Poul. Sent. 3, 4, § 1. very suitably uses as a Crci. for the unclassical possibilitas, which Quint. 3, 8, 25, terms an appellatio dura, and can be endured only as philosophical t. t. Potis, pote are not adjs., but adverbs, and occur (rarely in C., more freq. in the comic writers) only in the phrase potis est and pote for potest, potest esse, or fieri. A p. case, conditio, quae per rerum naturam admitti potest; also simply conditio (C. C. Rabir. perd. 5, 16): it is p., i. e. a) it can be, esse potest; also potest alone; e. g. it is p. that others believe so, potest ut illi ita arbitrentur; see Ter. Andr. 2, 1, 27. ß) it can happen, be done, fieri or effici potest. Also freq. simply potest (for fieri potest); e. g. so little is this p. now, ut enim id non potest. How is it p.? quid potest? if it is p., si potest: as much as p., quantum potest (poterit, &c.); see C. Ecl. p. 102 sq.: it is p. that ßc., fieri potest, ut ßc.; ent ut ßc. (see Ramsh. § 184, 1): that this is very p., id facile effici posse. 7) it may have happened, factum esse potest; accidisse potest: is it p. i. e. a) what do you say? quid alia? ß) what do you mean? ain't ain't ut. It is not p. but that I ßc., fieri non potest ut non or quin ßc.; facere non possum, ut non (ut nihil, &c.): a thing is p. to me, ce rei faciendae facultatem habeo; possum qd facere: if it is to be at all or by any means p., si ulli ratione efficere possum (potes, &c.); si ullo modo fieri poterit.—[The Latin also expresses our 'if possible,' in many cases by utique; as Quint. 10, 1, 20, perfectus liber utique ex integro recensendus, should, if possible, be read over again; see Herz. in loc. cit. p. 99.]—As far as p., quoad fieri potest or poterit: as . . . as p., quamvis a superl., e. g. as early as p., quam maturime; or by quam . . . potero; e. g. I will do it as shortly as p., agram quam brevissime potero: in every p. manner, quicquamque ratione; omnibus rebus: as p., fieri potest ut ßc. (it is p. that ßc.), or by fore (esp. with putare, expectare, pollicere, and like words); e. g. what sight do we imagine as p., if ßc., quod tandem spectaculum fore putamus, quum &c. (C. Tusc. 1, 20, 43): ad p. omnes, omnia: all p. kinds of torture, omnia exempla cruciatus: to try, or to do, every thing p., omnia facere, or omnia experiri; nihil inexpertum omittere; nihil sibi reliqui facere in qd ßc. (faciendae).—'not p.' may sit be translated by inveniri posse, esse negare, &c.; e. g. no third supposition is p.; or, it is not p. to make a third supposition, tertium nihil inveniri potest, or tertium esse quidquam nego: as far as p., quoad ejus fieri potest: as well as p., quantum or quam maxime possum (as much as I can)—quantum in me situm est (as much as lies in me)—pro viribus (according to my strength: not pro virili parte).
